Bogglesworld esl getting to know you

Basic EFL course with lesson plans and activities - by Yoda Schmidt recently, I was asked to teach a one-week course to several EFL students at a college near my workplace. The purpose of the course was to prepare the students for Nassus for New Zealand for 6 weeks as language exchange students. I was told (and predictably) that their level was going to be very low: false beginners, but barely. Some real beginners in the mix for sure. When I walked into class, I said, nothing. How are you? A look of relief on their faces as they replied, ok. You? In the robotic way they learned in middle school. Ok. It was obvious. My job was cut out for me. For me it will be a challenge because I always teach false beginners - the real ones, who have a lot of background knowledge and some listening ability, even if their spoken ability is limited. Below is an outline of the course complete with lesson plans and activities for teaching some very basic functions that they may need immediately upon arrival in an English-speaking country or even a country where the level of English as a second language is quite high. There is no particular order to be followed, but I strongly recommend using Chris's english class first. Apparently, that's the most important lesson they can learn. All classes are about an hour in length. All documents are in MS Word format to enable editing as teachers see fit: English in class: card activity. What to say when you don't understand someone is actually not my lesson plan. This lesson plan was written by Chris a few years ago. I always start beginner courses with it because it gives students the skills to get information when they don't understand a speaker.
